Seeing Wholes: Reconnecting a Fragmented World

Saturday 23rd Feb 2013 10.00–16.30.

Akousis Centre, Bristol.

We live in interesting times – a cultural turning point – where the political, social, economic and ecological challenges facing us today are creating destruction AND evolutionary possibilities.

Learning to ‘see wholes’ and the flow of ‘living energy’ can help us develop the sensitivities and capacities to embrace these evolutionary possibilities. These address the disconnectedness and selfishness of our fragmented world.

An application of Goethe’s method of ‘seeing wholes’ in nature will be introduced and then applied to social situations so that we experiences how ‘seeing wholes’ and sensing the flow of ‘living energy’ can create opportunities to rebalance our societies’ disconnected and individualistic nature. There is space both for the individual AND the collective. This helps us to be more caring, to access wise collective intelligence and take collaborative action. ‘Seeing wholes’ helps us to reconnect our fragmented world.

Gill Wyatt, the facilitator, is a psychotherapist and has edited and co-edited 3 books in the field of counselling and psychotherapy. Her research and work through ‘Creating Synergies’ is concerned with the transformational process needed by our society to transcend the challenges of the 21st Century. How can we revitalise our democracy, create more cohesive and resilient communities and promote more world-centric values so the emergent way forward is good for all?

Cost: £25 (benefits) to £75 (high income/employer sponsored)
